

HelloHuman

No survey ever broke down a silo.

We seat colleagues from different teams at the same table, for a few minutes. Then we show you what happened. A code on the table, no app to install, no personal data in the report.

You find out too late

The org chart does not say who talks to whom

The formal structure shows who reports to whom. The real network — who asks for an opinion, who unblocks a situation, who crosses a team boundary — stays invisible until someone resigns.

Surveys measure perception

An employee who reports feeling connected to other teams may not have spoken to any of them in a month. The gap between the statement and the act appears in no survey.

Integration takes years, and nobody times it

A new hire reaches the connectivity of a high performer in three to five years. With deliberate practices, in nine to twelve months.

The mechanism

Seven minutes, three times over

Scan

A printed code, left on the tables. It opens in the phone browser: no account, no install, no learning curve.

One question

The participant chooses how they want to take part. Four options, a single tap.

Composition

The algorithm forms the tables across departments. In the next round, nobody repeats anybody.

The comparison

What each one measures

Prices and methods are taken from the vendors public material, September 2026.

Culture Amp,
Peakon, Glint

Periodic surveys

$6 – 18 per employee, per month. They measure what employees report about themselves. Questionnaires of 40 – 80 items, annually.

Worklytics,
OrgMapper

Network analysis

Eighteen-item questionnaires or access to Slack and Teams. They measure existing digital communication, retrospectively.

Team building
agencies

Speed networking

$5 – 50 per person. They require chairs in two rows, a printed schedule for every participant and a host with a timer.

HelloHuman

Face-to-face encounters

Flat price per event. We measure the conversations that actually took place, in real time, with no questionnaire and no access to your systems.

The deliverable

What you receive

Three rates that form a funnel. That is the story of the report.

Crossing rate

how many conversations crossed a team boundary

Reciprocity rate

of those, how many were confirmed by both sides, independently

Requests to meet again

of those, how many were good enough that someone gave up novelty

Teams that never connect

department pairs seated together from which no connection emerged

What never reaches the report

An employee who assumes their interactions are attributed by name does not take part. And if they do, they answer defensively.

- No named pairs. The report does not show who sat with whom.
- No individual answers. Choices stay with the participant.
- No identifiers. First names never leave the session.
- No personality assessment. We do not classify people.

The report contains aggregate values only. Session data is deleted automatically after thirty days. We request no access to Slack, to Teams or to any of your infrastructure.

The conclusions

Three differences that matter

This is not a cheaper platform. It is a different kind of measurement.

- We do not ask. We seat people together
A survey establishes the silo. We cross it, then report whether it held.
- We request no access
Not to Slack, not to Teams, not to your HR system. A code on the table and the participants phones.
- The price is not per employee
Collection has no per-person cost. At a large organisation, the gap against the market becomes an order of magnitude.

One measurement gives you a photograph. Two, six months apart and with the same methodology, give you a direction.

The investment

Flat price, per event

Up to 100 participants

EUR 400

Three rounds, the full report, no setup fee.

Between 100 and 300

EUR 800

The same three rounds. The price is not calculated per employee.

Over 300

EUR 1,200

For large events, including those with thousands of participants.

The report interpreted by an accredited specialist: EUR 4,500 per delivery, separately.

Survey platforms cost between $7,200 and $28,800 a year for a two-hundred-person organisation. Implementation alone runs between $10,000 and $50,000.

The proposal

The first event, at 10% of the price

We leave the codes on the tables and deliver the full report. The decision to continue is made after you see the figures, not before.

No framework agreement, no budget approved in advance, no technical integration.
